GREAT PULL: Gorgeous barmaid Valerie Rindoni

BAR NONE: Student Jill Whitlock

BRITAIN'S BIG BUSTED BARMAIDS BOOB IN STATES

CHEERS! The great British pub is booming in the States, but not so our busy barmaids.

They're being shown the pub door by the American immigration service in a new crack-down on illegal aliens.

And that means girls who crossed the Atlantic looking for summer work have boobed.

Strict new laws aimed at wiping out illegal, foreign labour have sent them packing.

Ex-Manchester City soccer player Bobby McAlinden says he could do with more True Brits at his bars on Hermosa Beach, California, but couldn't afford the £30,000 penalty. He has only one, buxom Jessica Adams, 32, who says: "Americans expect to be served by a Brit."

Permit

Student Jill Whitlock, 27, of Tunbridge Wells, Kent, is lucky.

Jill, of the Crown and Anchor at Santa Monica, has a permit to work while a student at Loyola University.

She says: "Americans want pictures of the Queen and the Beatles on the walls, a Union Jack — and a British girl serving."

Joni Robertson, the American owner of a newly-converted hostelry in Los Angeles, is so keen to be authentic she says: "I'm trying to teach my American girls to speak with a British accent."

She's got Valerie Rindoni, 32, formerly of Sutton, Surrey.

Valerie who's married to an American, says: "They enjoy the pub because it's like a trip to England."

But nowadays they have to rely on importer Frank Dickens taking England to them.

And he says our beer still has great pulling power, unlike the new American barmaids.
