FOREWORD

When Tommy Vaughan started researching his family seriously, he discovered the microfilmed collection of Union county newspapers at the Carnegie Public Library in Union. There he found obituaries and marriage announcements for many family members. Each time he found a new family connection, he went back to look for them in the old papers. Soon he became so interested in the stories he was finding that he started at the beginning and wrote down all of the notices, thinking that other people needed the information found there, also.

One day last year as we were talking, he asked me if I would be interested in using the material for a series in our quarterly. It sounded good, so we arranged for him to bring his notebooks to my house so that I could see what he had. What he had was three three-inch notebooks crammed full of the hand-written notices he had been copying for over ten years! I knew immediately there was enough for a book! When our typist, Betty Jean Dill, started typing the records, it soon became apparent that the death notices alone would make up one book; the marriage records could be used in another.

The final result is now in your hands. Here you will find many clues to how people lived in the latter half of the nineteenth century and the first fourteen years of the twentieth. And you will learn much about how they died. Hopefully you will find the information you seek for members of your own ancestral family -- the date of death for people who, perhaps, never owned land or left wills, and may be buried in family burying grounds now lost; the names of relatives who survived and where they were living; perhaps the name of the wife -- even her maiden name, and sometimes the name of her father. Migration patterns show up when the deaths of people who had moved away were reported for their friends and relatives still living in Union county. Sometimes you may not be pleased with what you find! Human foibles are revealed freely. Black researchers will also find numerous records here.

In using the book you will find some abbreviations, most of them in common usage.

We would like to express our appreciation of some special people who have contributed greatly to the publication of this book. First is Joyce Vaughan; her encouragement of Tommy in his work cannot be overvalued. Also, my husband Jack, who has assisted in many ways, from running errands to preparing meals.

Betty Jean Dill, as mentioned above, typed up all the handwritten notes. Lovonia Hendrix proofread most of the copies, with some assistance by Helena Nolen and Gayle Williams.

Linda and Cris Crissinger with Linda's mother, Ruby Lee Stevens, criss-crossed Union county and surrounding areas of Cherokee and Spartanburg counties as they prepared the information in the Appendix to assist you in locating cemeteries where many of the people named in the newspaper items are buried. We tried to work out directions to the family burying grounds, but only a few could be clearly stated. Those are listed with the church cemeteries.

Brent Holcomb shared xerographic copies of the page from The Union Standard and the one from Vindicator to round out the collection. Librarians and curators have been most helpful in allowing use of their collections and facilities.

One further note should be made. Old newspapers are difficult to read, both in the original and in microfilmed copies. Even modern presses sometimes produce a page that has inadequate ink and is too light to read easily. That happened more frequently on the presses used for the newspapers this book covers. Tommy knows some obituaries were illegible. And some he may have just missed. While checking a few dates and names for accuracy in preparing the manuscript, he found a few he did not have. If any of you find transcripts or copies of obituaries from these early Union county papers, please send us a copy. We will print it in our quarterly and add it to the file for any future reprint of the book.

We believe that this book will be an extraordinarily helpful tool to researchers of Union county family lines. Good luck with your search!
